NAVIGATING TOWARD HEALTH AND WELLNESS

Jenise Finlay BScN, RN is a thesis-based Master of Nursing student at the University of Calgary. Her Master's research uses narrative inquiry to understand how living with chronic pain shapes the identity of emerging adult women. Jenise started her nursing career as a rural public health nurse and was previously a colorectal cancer screening lead for Alberta Health Services Enhanced Access to Cancer Screening program.

She is passionate about teaching and has worked as a community liaison and partner notification nurse with AHS' provincial sexually transmitted infection (STI) program since 2017. She currently works as a clinical lead and health promotion specialist for AHS' Sexual and Reproductive Health program. Additionally, Jenise is a board director for the Alberta Society for the Promotion of Sexual Health and past team lead for the AHS Research Challenge.

With strong interests in improving the care experience and empowering patients, Jenise aims to improve intersectoral collaboration and patient-oriented research for optimal patient outcomes and health system delivery.
